WORKERS SHOULD BE REPRESENTED

In No Other Way Can Laws Inimical to the Laboring Class Be Successfully Combated—Recommendations of Missouri's Joint Labor Board.

The report of the joint labor legislative board of Missouri, which did valiant work during the recent session of the legislature, urges upon organized labor the wisdom of electing union men to represent it in legislative halls.

We quote from the report:

"The members of the joint labor legislative board desire at this time to urge upon organized workmen throughout the state of Missouri to become active in the political party with which they are affiliated with the purpose of having men from the ranks of labor unions supported for the senate and house of representatives of Missouri. With over 100,000 active members in Missouri, the labor organizations had but two active members in the Forty-fourth general assembly. On the other hand, the lawyers' organizations of the state, with possibly 5,000 members, elected forty-three members to the legislature.

"To secure legislation for the benefit of the working class it is absolutely necessary that men from the ranks, who understand the conditions which surround the workmen and their families, who have suffered in the workshops, in the building trades lines, the mines, on the railroads and in the factories, be sent to both branches of the legislature to present the side of the working people and fight for the relief they demand. In our ranks can be found conservative, just, fair, reasonable and aggressive men who will carefully guard the interests of the whole state and all the people. Labor should have representation direct. Labor must have representation, and the present is a most opportune time to inaugurate plans to have nominated men from the ranks of labor for the next legislature.

"In view of the fact that every bill fostered by the joint board was favorably reported by the respective committees to which it had been referred by either branch, of the legislature owing to the practical argument made by members of the joint board before said committees, it is but reasonable to assume that had the rules of the legislature permitted members of the joint board to argue on each bill on the floor of both branches of the legislature the passage of nearly all, if not all, of the bills organized labor was interested in would have been the result.

"The great majority of the legislature is composed of representatives of the rural districts of the state, whose knowledge of the conditions, aims and objects of organized labor is gained mainly from published accounts in newspapers, not infrequently damaging to the interests and reputation of trades unionism. These representatives on matters pertaining to organized labor invariably follow the leadership of the country lawyers, some of whom, if not already employed by a corporation, aspire and court such patronage, usually desirable from a financial standpoint. The result is obvious.

"With a number of practical trades unionists as members of each branch of the legislature it would be but a matter of a few years until the representatives of these rural districts would be convinced that their interests would be conserved by working hand in hand with organized labor instead of following blindly the representatives of the legal fraternity and the corporations.

"It is true that under the present remuneration of legislators self sacrifice of organized labor is necessary, and organized labor should follow its brethren in England and make up the difference to the representatives elected between the wages of their vocation and their pay as legislators.

"The labor movement would not have assumed its present importance without the self sacrifice displayed by its progenitors, and what has been done by labor economically can and will be done in legislation if labor is united and determined.

"We would urge, therefore, that all central bodies and local unions demand of respective political parties to place on the legislative tickets members of organized labor not picked by the party leaders, but selected by the labor organizations, and cause their election.

"As a result of the efforts of the members of the joint labor legislative board numerous good laws were passed and several bad laws defeated."
